The Aims and Functions of INCA

"An association where there prevails a frankness, honesty and earnest desire for progress and co-operation, where technical and commercial experiences are freely exchanged and all feelings and consideration of competition are forgotten."

Dr. Walter M. Matuschke

An association where there prevails a frankness, honesty and earnest desire for progress and co-operation, where technical and commercial experiences are freely exchanged and all feelings and consideration of competition are forgotten.

Wide Association

INCA's original idea and planning was to erect a Research Centre solely in Britain. The plan, however, was revised because INCA is a membership organisation and approaches to participate in such projects were received from the supply industry, press manufacturers, ink makers and the paper industry and several other associations.

Taking into account that several Associations are considering either a laboratory in the Research Centre premises or participation in the construction of a laboratory or building, the INCA Research Centre will be able to provide the first planning of this kind.
